well and exercising, this stress has made me lose 15 pounds this month. And I feel like I'm dying physically. I am trying to see dr. Pallie soon.

It's not too late.

I don't threaten. I need to protect myself and the kids.

How is that damaging? They know we are divorcing. They know nana and granddad are moving here. They know we are looking at houses. We just happened to see a nice neighborhood on our way home with homes for sale and stopped to look. We didn't go house hunting.

My true colors are that I love you. Nothing else.

And when I tell you it's too late, you turn mean and nasty and threaten all sorts of awful consequences, such as taking our beautiful children away from me.

They are entirely confused now. They feel they have to choose either you or me as a parent to love, when in all actuality we will both be their parent...both be there for them, just living in separate houses.

Come back. We can heal.

I do love you.

slowly distanced myself from you. My love for you was not met with love by you, love necessary to fill me.. My love for you is gone. As you beg for me to come back, you also wrote horrible, nasty things about me. That is not love. To turn our friends against me is not love. To threaten to remove the children from my care is not love. To grope me when I say "don't touch me" is not love. To call me derogatory names, such as troll, is not love. To make assumptions about my personal life and tell everyone you know what you think is going on is not love. To continue to write me all day and into the wee hours of the morning (hundreds of texts and emails a day) when I have asked you to stop is not love.

Every day when I walk out of the gym (even before this all started) I would look to see if you were sitting in your car. Today I cried walking out knowing I would never ever see you there again.

Please send me a sign, something to show me that you are at least reading my messages, thinking about your options, considering the possibility of us.

com be with me,
come cry with me,
come heal with me,
come go forward with me,
come grow old with me.
